NEW YORK, Jan. 30 .- Stanton Sickles son of Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, gave out several more of the fervent love letters his father wrote many years ago o a woman who since has been hap pily married and is now prominent is society in this city.

In one letter there was this sentence filled the same day."

"I am driven to this in my to bring my father to terms," said the Mobley; outside sentinel, Russell Lenson in making public the missives "He refuses to accept the offer my mother and I have made to pay all his debta and set him right with the world, provided that he gets rid of his house-keeper, Miss Wilmerding. "He persists in posing as a martyr to the general public when in reality he has brought all his troubles upon himself. Women have helped him to squandor his own fortune as well as mine and my sister's. Therefore I do not hesitate to show his affairs with women—this one in particular."

All the letters which Stanton exhibited were written by his father soon after the woman in question had announced to the old general that their affair was at an end, and that she would not again meet him. That was in 1896, the son said. In that year the woman married.

One letter said:

It was about this time (in 1896), the on says, that the mother of the woman to whom the general was writing took her abroad to get her away from him. The following letter was forwarded to her in Europe:

Although you have put the ocean between us, you are mine, my wife, as you yourself have told me so many thousands of times.

I have sworn that you will never marry another until I die. You will not have long to wait. If you do not wait three graves will be filled the same day.

I have sworn it and will make my oath good here or elsewhere. How could you go away without a word of forgiveness? You know how I love you. You know how I have suffered. Every night and morning I pray that you come back to me. I dreamed the other night that I had kissed you. Then I awoke and found I had only been dreaming, that you were in far away Paris and I was in New York. Come back to me soon.
